A NATIONAL CONVERSATION ON RACE

FACILITATED BY DIVERSITY TRAINERS

LEE MUN WAH & LINDA COMPTON

On September 19, 2008 The Quan Yin Center will be presenting our first National Conversation on Race in Oakland, California. The evening will feature a short clip from the award-winning film, Last Chance for Eden, followed by a spirited and honest conversation on race and racism. The goal of this project is one of healing and understanding. But before we can get to that place of healing, we need to learn not only about our similarities, but also about how our differences, when viewed negatively, have separated us, and wounded and destroyed the spirits and dreams of many families and communities across the nation.

Come join us in an evening of friendship and understanding. The next day, on September 20th, we will be offering a free all-day training on how to engage in this type of conversation in your home and workplace. At the training we will be offering a Diversity Conversation Kit to help you with facilitating these types of discussions. The goal is to continue this conversation on a daily and monthly basis, because friendships and relationships take time and effort. They do not happen solely through celebrating diversity once a year, but through thoughtful and personal exchanges and stories. We encourage you to come join us in this important and much-needed project to bring us together once more as a community and as a nation. If not you, then who? If not now, then when?
